COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE – ONE OF THE MOST FILMED INSTITUTES

Noted thinker, social reformer and agriculturist Mahatma Jyotiba Phule's appeal to the British Government to set up institutions for agriculture education and research in India led to the opening of a branch for teaching agriculture in the College of Science at Pune in 1879. Subsequently, in 1907, the college was to develop into a separate College of Agriculture, known as Mahatma Phule Krishi Vidyapeeth.

The College of Agriculture, Pune is one of the oldest agricultural colleges in the country and spread over an area of ~150 acres. The distinctive feature of the campus is its main administrative building in the British architectural style, with a central dome-shaped hall.

Scenic locations in the campus include the new building, crop cafeteria, high tech floriculture bank, mushroom unit, agriculture farms, etc.
